WE WONDER IF BOB AND OHRYS ARE ALIVE—AND HOPE FOR THE BEST.

WE WONDER IP BOB AND OHRYS ARE ALIVE—AND HOPE FOR THE REST.

The Lorimer yeacht was to wait three days—and no more. So Bob and Spence had insisted. It was the morning of the third day. From the Maxican, journal which Dr. Travers translated we learned that the earthquake had partially destroyed the haciends where all our interests were centred. It was one of the most fimous show places in Mexico. On account of its antiquity as well as its arehitectural value, its destruction was deplored as a national loss, and since it was always included in every fourist's interest. Columns were printed about wint had happened to the most discussed the possibility of restoring it had madings, but nothing at all about wint had happened to the hardor with instructions to remain there all day. And all day Daddy Lorimer and I tramped the deck and strained our eyes for the first ghinges of our dear ones.

"What was your plan for getting bold of Chrystobel! Bob said you had a good one," said Daddy.

"I think you know that Don Manuel fell desperately in love with Chrys?" I asked.

"It looked that way."

"He'd call it diplomacy, probably."

"I think he bribed Donna Camilla to hide Chrystobel. And the old woman was easy to bribe, because she simply adores Certeis.
